RECOMMENDATION OF THE SALEM HISTORIC LANDMARKS COMMISSION

CASE NO.: Local Historic Resource Designation Case No. HIS22-30

FINDINGS: Based upon the application materials, the facts and findings in the Staff Report incorporated herein by reference, and testimony provided at the first evidentiary Public Hearing of January 19, 2023 to consider the local historic resource designation of the Salem Civic Center, the Historic Landmarks Commission (HLC) finds that the applicant adequately demonstrated that their proposal complies with the applicable provisions of the Salem Revised Code (SRC) 230.010(e) as follows:

1. SRC 230.010 (e) (1) Age: The proposed historic resource is at least 50 years old, or demonstrates exceptional significance if less than 50 years of age.

Findings: The HLC finds that the resource is 50 years of age; therefore the HLC finds that this criterion has been met.

- 2. SRC 230.010 (e) (2) Significance: The proposed historic resource demonstrates significance in at least one of the following areas:
 - a. Cultural Significance: (i) Contributes to the character and historic identity of the neighborhood or City; (ii) Makes a contribution to the historic character of a historic resource, neighborhood, district, or City as a whole

Findings: The HLC finds that the potential resource has cultural significance for its association with Salem's community planning efforts in the late 1960s and early 1970s. The community planning efforts led by the City of Salem's Civic Center planning committee demonstrated a commitment to participatory community planning methods which were newly emerging across the nation during this time period. The participatory planning process is a process which focuses on identifying stakeholders and then establishing a framework where these participants can be part of the decision-making process. This process empowered stakeholders by allowing them to work together within a politically legitimatized framework which actively determined the proposed location and use of the new civic center. The HLC finds that the resource has cultural significance for its association with the local Salem community who came together to define its future and its priorities – public services in a well-designed and open public place designed to specifically address the needs of Salemites.

b. Human Significance: (i) Is associated historically with the life or activities of a person, group, organization or institution that has made a significant contribution to the local community; or (ii) Is associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of local history; or (iii) Has yielded, or may be likely to yield, important information concerning prehistory or history.

Findings: The HLC finds that the first documented efforts for a new Civic Center began in 1947 when the Salem Chamber of Commerce published their "Long-Range Plan for Salem, Oregon." This report identified a critical and urgent need for Salem as Oregon's Capitol City to lead the way in developing a new Civic Center. Multiple sites were considered including one north of downtown near Union Street, and one extending from High Street west to the Willamette River. These sites were deemed prohibitive due to the costs of land acquisition. However, a four-block area already partially owned by the city, bounded by Leslie and Trade streets, and by Liberty and Commercial on the east and west, known as the Hillside Site, became a strong contender. A Civic Center Committee was established, but multiple plans and bond measures failed again and again. It was not until 1968, more than twenty years after efforts first began, when the community rallied together behind building a new Salem Civic Center at the Hillside site. The difference ultimately was the public outreach and education. Encouraging a 'yes vote' was accomplished largely by Salem's community of women – women who were identified in newspapers most often by their husbands' names. Over 500 women volunteered to host block parties, block coffees, distribute brochures, make and deliver buttons, and share "flipbooks" featuring the plans with the community. There were phone lines citizens could call with questions and women volunteers made their headquarters at the Chamber of Commerce office. These many dedicated volunteers took the information to the voters instead of relying on voters to find it. All of these efforts were successful and finally in 1968, the fourth bond measure passed approving a $6 million bond measure for the construction of the Civic Center, including the new municipal administration building, a central public library, police and municipal court facilities and a central fire station.

Therefore, the HLC finds that the resource has human significance for its association with the local Salem community who worked for almost twenty years to identify a location for the new Civic Center and gain support for the funding to build it.

c. Architectural Significance: (i) Is significant as an example of a particular architectural style, building type, structural type, or method of construction; or (ii) Is the work of an acknowledged master or architect, or possesses high artistic values.

Findings: The HLC finds that the Salem Civic Center is an excellent local example of Brutalist architecture. The completed Salem Civic Center was featured alongside the First National Center in Portland, Oregon in a 1973 edition of Tone magazine. The magazine described the Salem Civic Center as an excellent example of Brutalist architecture comprised of "poured-concrete buildings... [that] have a massive, contemporary look but have been designed with an airiness that orients beautifully with the open spaces of the twelve-acre park-like setting. The complex comprises a city hall, public library, and fire hall... A reflecting pond, five fountains, and extensive plantings are in the landscape plans. The entire area is designed as a refreshing space for public enjoyment, and all buildings and open areas are connected by ramps for wheelchairs. The center is the largest project ever undertaken by the City of Salem and, in the eyes of the administration, employees, and citizens of the capital city of Oregon, is a great success." Therefore, the HLC finds that the Salem Civic Center is significant as an example of the Brutalist architectural style.

3. SRC 230.010 (e) (3) Integrity: The proposed historic resource retains sufficient original design characteristics, craft work, or material to serve as an example of an architectural period, significant building type or structural type, or recognized architectural style.

Findings: The HLC finds that The Salem Civic Center retains its original form and is in its original location. The HLC finds that the resource retains sufficient original integrity to convey its historical and cultural significance and this criterion has been met.

The Historic Landmarks Commission RECOMMENDS APPROVAL of HIS22-30, authorizing City Council designation of the Salem Civic Center as a Local Historic Resource.
